

Good Afternoon,

dear Employer

I am more than ecstatic for the opportunity and the vote of confidence that you have entrusted in me by putting forth this offer and allowing me to join your family, just one hiccup. The salary provided of $45,000 is a large amount, but quite a ways away from what I believe I am worth. Not only do I have a degree from a top college and am at the top of my class, but I also bring to the table multiple years of managerial experience and a diverse skill set, which are invaluable in this position. As stated in my resume, I am working towards 3 certifications, which will put me in an even better bargaining position, as well as a multitude of upcoming classes in many of the fields mentioned in the job posting that will help to expand and implement some of my knowledge a whole lot better. For these reasons, I believe that a bump of 15% to the initial offer would bring the final compensation to 51,750 + benefits. I wish you well and look forward to providing extreme value to your company once you have looked over this offer.

Kind regards, Yoenis